Coquitlam Indian Restaurants - The term supper, designates a meal which happens in early evening or late afternoon. There is no uniform use of the word supper throughout the world, even though the term can refer to a kind of meal as well as the time of day it is served. Normally, the word supper is used in cultures where the use of English is the secondary or primary language. This is interesting as the origins of the term are really associated with the French language.

Various individuals believe that the term supper is the English version of the French word "souper." There are various people who trace the origin of the word supper to the German word "suppe." In both English and German translations, the context of the words are connected with soup and considered to be a designation for the last meal of the day, whether or not it is served after or prior nightfall.

In places where English is the first language, the usage of supper is usually utilized in a variety of different ways. This may include various uses in different regions in a country as well as being not only true of different usages within different nations. The word supper can be also used interchangeably with different words which designate the last meal of the day.

Like for example, within the United States, supper can have different meanings within various areas of the country. In the South, the term means the evening meal when it is consumed at home among family. The meal is normally somewhat light and may even consist mainly of leftovers from the mid-day meal. When the final meal of the day involves visitors and is more formal, it could mean as dinner instead of supper. This change of terms is not usually a consistent practice because in various areas of the world the mid-day meal is referred to as dinner or lunch.

Usually, supper meant the meal which happened around nightfall. This was largely due to agricultural farming practices and the times when individuals took their meals. The mid-day meal was the most essential meal of the day since it enabled farmers to generate an adequate amount of energy to physically work in the fields through the heat of the afternoon sun. In this way, supper would usually be a lighter meal that will commonly contain foods which were not likely to keep people awake. Usually, members of the farming community would usually retire for the night shortly following supper, due to the fact they were waking up at dawn the next morning so as to tend to the farm.

In different places of the country, late meals can mean suppers or dinners, that depends on the local customs. Across the globe, late dinners or late meals may range from the hours of five in the afternoon to nine in the evening. Supper is rarely ever considered to be the most important meals of the day as it happens so near bedtime compared to whichever other meal.
